OTHING can be a greater Proof of the Uprightness of a Man's Intentions, than a plain, simple Confisence of the Accounts he gives of him-felf and his Defigns, with the Principles he recommends to the Practice of conduct nothing can more render a publick Writer worthy the Effeem and Encouragement of Mankind, the contrary Behaviour has never fail'd of producing the contrary Effect:

Hence may be judg'd the prodigious Affurance of the Writers of the Graftsman and Gammon Sense Journals, who venture, without any Regard to their own Charafters, or the Sense and Understanding of their Readers, to affert, without Reserve, whatever will contradict the Writers on the Side of the Nation, when it even happens, that what they undertake to confute, themselves have pointed out as Sentiments of a Tendency the most defireable of any for the Interests of Great Britain. Mr. Common Soufe of last Saturday has given such an Instance of this Kind, as the Publick were scarce ever offer'd before, and which the smallest Share of ever ofter d before, and which the imaliest Share of good Senfe or Modefly would have prevented from appearing now: For in the first Paragraph of his Paper, and in the Tenor of the whole, he not only proves himself a mean, evalue Trifler, but supposes his Readers as incapable of conceiving what he fays, as he is of faying what he ought. — He acquaints us, that he little thought the Writers in Desence of the Configuration of t flitation, whom he condescends to term the purcenary Side, 'would ever display their Oratory in putting the Representatives of the People in mind of their Duty; and since of late, to the great Surprise of him and his Brethren, they have said, (as they have seen as the property of the property of the state of the second Parliament is the highest Trust that can be reposed in an Englishman. — Why, truly, this very sagacious Gentleman, in order to shew the Occasion of his being surprized at the above Assertion, sets about proving, that there is not the least Cause for Wonder or Surprize in it; every Word spoken by these Gentlemen being so far from conveying the Meaning they intended, that the Import is directly the contrary of what their Words imply.—Was ever such Nonsense offered to Mankind under any Name whatever, but especially under that of Common Sense! — Agreeably to which setting out, this extraordinary Gentleman proceeds to assure us, that though he will agree with the Writers on the Side of the Constitution concerning the Importance of the Trust reposed in a Parliament is the highest Trust that can be reposed concerning the Importance of the Trust reposed in a Member of Parliament, yet be WILL CERTAINLY differ with them as to the NATURE OF THE DUTY. differ with them as to the NATURE OF THE DUTY.

It may not be amiss here to observe, that to give what he says the greater Weight, he uses the formidable Monosyllable WE, by which he probably implies himself, and his faithful Friend and Ally, Mr. J. Purser of White Fryars; wherefore I shall make bold to consider what he advances as their joint Sentiment, in the single Light of his own Production.

We, says he, think it (the Duty of a Representative of the People) ought to be executed according to the sirst Design of its Institution, that is to say, for the Good of Design of its Institution, that is to say, for the Good of the Electors; they, (i. c. the Writers for the People) that it ought to be discharged for the private Prefit of the Elected. --- What more glaring Mark of Affurance, or ridiculous Absurdity, could be expected from the most illiterate Wretch, that ever undertook the Detence of a Pickpocket, on the Verge of a Horfe-pond, than this Writer offers in his sham Vindication of the People's Rights and most valuable Privileges? For I will venture to lay, that not one Plea can be affign'd for afferting, that the Gentlemen who write in Defence of the Conflitution and Government underfland the Duty of a Member of Parliament is to create the private Interest of themselves only; since no Expression of that Tendency ever dropp'd from one of their Pens, however earnessly this Gentleman and his

Priends might wish it had; for, though it be but too notorious, that his Patrons may have firove to turn real Duty of their Truft.

WITH equal Modefly doth this Writer fay,
We think, the private Interest of a Truffee must neither direct nor influence his Opinion ; they conceive it a Trade by which a Man is to make his Fortune; — when he must have known, that did the Gentlemen who oppose the Attempts of his Patrons allow private Fortunes to be made by Seats in Parliament, they would long ago have freed them-felves from the Fatigues attending an Opposition that nothing but the Inability of a few Men to make their Fortunes at the publick Expence first occasion'd, has Fortunes at the publick Expense first occasion'd, has all along continued, and has lately discover'd itself in so unguarded and violent a Manner, as to pur Men quite out of Conceit with the publick Business in any Shape, since their own Purposes could not be answer'd from it.

Were the Subject less important, it would be impossible to avoid laughing at the next Paragraph:

--- They (says he) have consin'd the Whole of this Duty to One Point, that is, to a strict Attendiance.

Very possibly, Writers not in the Service of the Opposition may have asserted, that little Service can be done the People in the Parliament House by those Gentlemen who are out of it; and it is not improbable, but some may have been so bold as not improbable, but some may have been so bold as to affert, that the Intention of the Electors is but indifferently answer'd by those Gentlemen, who, while the Bufiness they were chosen to execute is carrying on at Westminster, are galloping after a Pox or a Badger Fifty or a bundred Alles from that City; from such Assertions, and many more of the like Tendency, People have, sure enough, been brought to conclude, that Attendance in Parliament is so far the Duty of a Member Sent to fit in Parliament, that though merely Sitting there is not his whole Duty, yet without a pre-pious Comphance with that Part of it, his whole Duty must absolutely be neglected; since whatever Service he may pretend, or even do his Country in other Respects, as it is not done in his Parliamentary Capacity, it can-not be consider'd as Part of the Discharge of the Trust reposed in him by his Electors, and, in effect, by the whole People - When this Writer, and his Bro ther D'Anvers, have proved, that the greatest Good can be done the Nation by a British Parliament, will be their doing nothing at all, a fuller Defence of what has hitherto been said upon the Subject may be necessarily fary; but, till then, they must indulge Mankind with the Liberty of remaining in the old-fashion'd Opinion, that in Cases where Business must be done, the Persons, for whose Benefit it is dispatched, are full as much obligated to those who bear the Fatigues attending its ligated to those who bear the Fatigues attending its Execution, as to those who run from it.

Ho w deeply are the Gentlemen who have written in Defence of the People, with respect to the Duty of their Representatives, obliged to this Writer, when he owns, that for their Sakes only he will allow, that it is the Duty of Members of Parliament to attend; a Concession, from him, as extraordinary, as the Manner in which it is made: But it is not a little diverting, after declaring only the Gentlemen he honours with the Title of Mercenaries could have exterted this Confession from him, to find him own it to be the Language of our Laws, and the Sense of our Constitution! a good Effect, indeed, of the Writers for that Constitution, and attended with the more Honour to their Labours, fince none befide could have brought him to an Acknowledgment fo re-

THIS is succeeded by an ancient Bead roll of Sup positions, (which serve to prove alike whatever he advances) about a perverse Spirit in an Affembly; a Mini-fler resolved to carry the Nation's Purse; the Duty of a Guardian to leave his Ward to those who would ruin him; the Necessity of Men, when they cannot serve themselves, ceasing to serve others, &c. after all which, finding his Arguments make but an indifferent Figure in his own Eyes, and fearing they would make a much worse in the Eyes of his Readers, he raises his old Battery of Scandal, and mounts upon it his most valuable Pieces of Artillery, viz Mercenary, Hire, Taxes, Penal Laws. Crimes of Men in Power, (or of being in Power) Wakedness of Conduct, Bribery, Corruption, &c. which are fol-

were the Gentlemen who opposed their narrow Views, from imitating their Example, of attending the Business of Parliament no longer than a Hope of Advantage continued, that the ridiculous withdrawing of others from their Duty, instead of raising a Diffinclination, redoubled their Vigour in Dispatch of the Longer and Section of the Honse of Commons! a Supposition as big with Informer and Section to the Confitution, real Daty of their Tout. being in Possession of the House of Commons! a Supposi-tion as big with Insolence and Section to the Constitution, as it is with Malice and Abuse to the Gentlemen who Support and defend it :- But this, and all Examples of the same Kind, instead of producing the Purposes for which they are calculated, serve to convince such as thro' Inadvertency may have given some Attention to this Writer, that no Publick Benefit to Britain is to be expected from the Labours of a Man regardless of every Obligation to the People in whose Defeace he would be thought to have drawn his Quill; fince no General Good can be expected, where private Pique and Resentment so far prevail, as to banish even Common Decency from Writings offered to the Perusal of the whole Kingdom: Few Men being so far unacquainted with buman Nature, and the Affinity that is ever discernible between Designs in themselves good, and the Measures pursued to accomplish them, as to mistake the perpetual Railings of a Few for popular Complaints; Grumbling against Men in Publick Employments, for a Dislike of the Employments themselves; the Abuse of every Man in Possession of the Royal Favour, for the Effect of a Love to our Sovereign; nor the Infulting all intrusted in the Administration of the Government, for the warm Breathings of an Affection for our Constitution:
-For, whatever is suggested by the mean Aris of fuch as watch every Opportunity of corrupting the Principles and misguiding the Judgment of the good People of Great Britain, the fleady and unflaken Endeavours of those Gentlemen, whom no Infults can divert, no Menaces draw from the Service of the Nation, will nev retail to appear with proper and necessary Weight, to the Free and Unbiassed, the Candid and Impartial Part
